King of the Khyber Rifles Talbot Mundy

A Story That Combines the Thrill of Modern Detective Fiction With the Romance of Arabian Nights Tales

ADVENTURE AND ROMANCE EXTRAORDINARY

In this remarkable tale Mr. Mundy introduces us to the mysteries and charm of ladia, and to an interesting people of the Orient about whom the western world knows little or nothing. In the company of Captain Atheistan King his hero, we go on a wonderful fourney in Khintan caves: and with him we meet Yasmini, an exotic beauty of marvelous fascination. It gives us great pleasure to publish "King of the Khyber Rifles" because we believe our readers will enjoy the serial more than any we have printed in a long time.

CHAPTER L

The men who govern indis-more power to them and her -are few. Those who stand in their way and pretend to belp them with a flood of words are a host. The charge has seen the light in print that Indis-wellspring of plague and sudden death and money lenders has sold her soul to twenty succeeding conquerors in

So when the world war broke the world was destined to be surprised on ing something. Can you imagine 'em India's account. The Red sea, full of keeping quiet now? racing transports crowded with darkskinned gentlemen whose one prayer was that the war might not be over before they should have struck a blow for Britain, was the Indian army's arswer to the press

More than one nation was deeply shocked by India's answer to "practices" that had extended over years. But there were men in India who learned to love India long ago with that love that casts out feat, who knew exactly what was going to happen and could therefore afford to wait for orders instead of running round in rings.

Atheistan King for instance, nothing yet but a captain unattached, sat in meagerly furnished quarters with his beels on a table. He is not a doctor, yet he read a book on surgery; and when he went over to the he carried the book under his arm and continued to read it there. In the other room where the telegraph bing were littered in confusion all about the floor, the other officers sent telegrams and forgot King, who sat and smoked and read about surgery : and before he had nearly finished one box of cheroots a general at Peshawur wiped a haid red skull and sent him an urgent telegram.

"Come at once!" It said simply. King was at Lahore, but miles don't when the dogs of war are loosed. The right man goes to the right place at the exact right time then, and the fool goes to the wall. In that one respect war is better than

In the train on the way to Peshawur ruled her." was not troubled by forced conversation. Consequently he reached Peshswur comfortable. In spite of the came the least shade more authoritsbeat. And his genial manner of salut- tive. ing the full-general who met him with a dogcart at Peshawur station was something scandalous. Full-generals, caves! Ask her for it! For the sake particularly in the early days of war.

"Come at Once." It Said.

captains very often; yet King climbed into the dogeart unexcitedly, after bringing in rumors of ten thousand keeping the general waiting while he men in Khinjan caves, and of another

The general cracked his whip without any other comment than a smile. A blood mare tore sparks out of the story about a 'Heart of the Hills' combegan to ribbon out between the and a holy war such as the world has shaken steels as their rifles came to facts." the "present," which courtesies the eral noticed with a raised whip. On the dogeart's high front seat, staring straight ahead of him between the horse's ears. King listened. The King grunted with the lids half-low-red over full, dark eyes. He did not and one wheel ceased to touch the ook especially handsome in that at-gravel as they whiried along a semi-Some men swear be looks like

THE EDITOR. not keeping back more than a mere handful to hold the tribes in check." King nodded. There has never been peace along the parthwest border. It from that quarter. In fact it must have been partly on the strength of some of King's reports that the general was planning now "Well, the tribes'll know presently how many men we're sending overses There've been rumors about Khinjan did not need vision to foresee trouble

"That depends, sir. Yes, I can imagine ft.

by the hundred lately. They're cook-

The general laughed. "That's why sent for you. I need a man with imagination! There's a woman you've got to work with on this occasion who can imagine a shade or two too much What's worse, she's ambitious. So I chose you to work with her."

King's lips stiffened under his mustache, and the corners of his eyes wrinkled into crow's feet to correspond. Eyes are never coni-black of course, but his looked it at that min-

"You know we've sent men to Khipjan who are said to have entered the caves. Not one of 'em has ever returned.

King frowned.

"She claims she can enter the caves and come out again at pleasure. She has offered to do it, and I have accepted. Can you guess who she is?"

"Not Tesmini?" King hazarded, and the general nedded. The helmet-strap mark, printed indelibly on King's jaw and cheek by the Indian sun, tightened and grew whiter-as the general noted out of the corner of his eye. "Know her?"

"Know of her, of course, sir. Every body does. Never met her to my

"Um-m-m! Whose fault was that? Somebody ought to have seen to that. Go to Delhi now and meet her. I'll send her a wire to say you're coming. She knows I've chosen you. She tried to insist on full discretion, but I over-eyes wrinkled. The general's voice be-

"When you see her, get a pass from her that'll take you into Khinjan of appearances I'll gazette you seconded to the Khyber rifles. For the sake of success, get a pass from her!" "Very well, sir."

"You've a brother in the Khyber rifles, haven't you? Was it you or your brother who visited Khinjan once and sent in a report?"

"I did. sir."

He spoke without pride. Even the brigade of British-Indian cavalry that went to Khinjan on the strength of his report and leveled its defenses with the ground, had not been able to find the famous caves. Yet the caves themselves are a byword.

"There's talk of a filhad (holy war). There's worse than that! When you went to Khinian what was your chief object?"

To find the source of the everlasting rumors about the so-called Heart of the Hills, sir."

"Yes, yes. I remember. I read your report. You didn't find anything, did vou? Well. The story is now that the Heart of the Hills' has come to life. So the spies say."

King whistled softly.

"There's no guessing what it the spies in Delhi, but they're likely means," said the general. "Go and to break for the 'Hills' any minute work with Yasmini. The spies keep large lashkar not far away from Khinjan. There must be no jihad. King! India is all but defenseless! This lam, and a dusty military road ing to life may presage unity of action wheels. Sentries in unexpected places not seen. Go up there and stop it if anounced themselves with a ring of you can. At least, let me know the > King grunted. To stop a holy war single handed would be rather like stopping the wind-possibly easy enough, if one knew the way. Yet be knew no general would throw away a man like himself on a useless venture. He began to look happy.

an, and others liken him to a pretentious residence, sentries estates, all of them choosing to be estated by the sais average down and in less than exity seconds King was following the general through a wide estrance into a crowded hall. The bestant the general's fat figure darkened the doorway twenty men of higher rank than King, native and English rose from lined-up chairs and pressed forward.

"Sorry-have to keep you all waiting-busy!" He waved them aside with a little apologetic gesture. "Come in here, King."

King followed him through a door that siammed tight behind him on rubber jambs. "Sit down !"

The general unlocked a steel drawer and began to rummage among the pepers in it. In a minute he produced a package, bound in rubber bands with a faded photograph face upward on the top.

"That's the woman! How d'you like the look of her?"

King took the package and for a minute stared hard at the likeness of a woman whose fame has traveled up and down India until her witchers has become a proverb. She was dressed as a dancing woman, yet very few dancing women could afford to be dressed as she was. The general watched his face with eyes that missed nothing. "Remember-I said work with her?

Like the Look of HerF

King looked up and nodded. They say she's three parts Russian," said the general. "To my knowledge she speaks Russian like a native, about twenty other tongues as well, including English. She was the girl widow of a ruscally hill rajah. eard she loved her rajah. And story that she potsoned him. I know she got away with his money and that's proof enough of brains! Some say she's a she-deril. I think that's an exaggeration, but bear in mind she's dangerous!" King grinned. A man who trusts Eastern women over readily does not rise far in the secret service.

"If you've got nous enough to keep on her soft side and use her-not let her use you you can keep the Hills quiet and the Khyber safe! If you can contrive that-now-in this pinch -there's no limit for you! Commander in chief shall be your job before you're sixty!"

King pocketed the photograph and papers. "I'm well enough content, sir, as things are," he said quietly. The general paced once across the room and once back again, with hands behind him. Then he stopped in front of King. "No man in India has a stiffer task than you have now! A jihad launched from the 'Hillis' would mean anarch; in the plains. That would entail send ing back from France an army that can't be spared. There must be no jihed, King! There must-not-one! Keep that to your head!" "What arrangements have been nade with her, sir?" "Practically none! She's watching the spies in Delhi, but they're likely Then they'll be arrested. When the happens the fate of India may be in your hands and hers! Get out of my way now, until tiffip-time "

In a way that some men never learn King proceeded to efface himself entirely among the crowd in the ball contriving to say nothing of any ac to his long dining table. Tet be did not look furtive or secretive. Nobody noticed him, and he noticed evdy. There is nothing whatever secretive about that.

The fare was plain, and the meal perfunctory affair. The general and his guests were there for no other did not answer, but his eyes smiled. After lunch he was closeted with the general again for twenty minutes. Then one of the general's carriages took him to the station : and it did not appear to trouble him at all that the other occupant of the carriage was the self-same Major Hyde who had sat next him at lunch. In fact, he smiled so pleasantly that Hyde grew exasperated. Neither of them spoke. At the station Hyde lost his temper openly and King left him abusing an unhappy native servant. The station was crammed to suffo ration by a crowd that roared and writhed and smelt to high heaven. But the general himself had telephoned for King's reservation, so he took his time. There were din and stink and dust bepeath a savage sun, shaken into reverberations by the scream of an engine's safety valve. It was India in essence and awake !- India arising out of letherey |- India as she is more often nowadays and it made King for the time being of the Khyber rifles. happier than some other men can be in ballrooms.

Any one who watched him-and there was at least one man who didmust have noticed his strange abitity, almost like that of water, to reach the point he simed for through and not around, the crowd.

He neither shoved nor argued. Orders and blows would have been equally useless, for had it tried the crowd ould not have obeyed, and it was in ne mind to try. Without the least apparent effort he arrived-and there is no other word that quite describes ithe arrived. He climbed into his carriage and leaned from the window.

"Why are you here?" asked an acid voice behind him; and without troubling to turn his head, he knew that Major Hyde was to be his carriage mate again.

"Orders." said King.

"le that your answer?" asked the major. Balked ambition is an ugiv horse to ride. He had tried for a command but had been shelved.

"I have sufficient authority." said King unruffled He spoke as if he were thinking of something entirely different. His even were as if they mew the major from a very long way of and rather approved of him on the whole. "Show me your authority, please!"

King dived into an inner pocket and produced a card that had about tea words written on its face, above a general's signature. Hyde read it and

"So you're one of those are you!" be said in a tone of voice that would start a fight in some parts of the world more than ever; he snorted, closed his mouth with a snap and turned to re-

CHAPTER IL

The train pulled out, amid a din of pices from the left-behind that nearly drowned the panting of the overloaded engine. Hyde all but stripped himself and drew on striped pajames. King was content to lie in shirt sleeves on the other berth, with knees raised, so that Hyde could not overlook the general's papers. At his case he studied them one by one, memorizing a string of names, with details as to their own ers' antecedents and probable present whereabouts. There were several photographs in the packet, and be studied them very carefully indeed.

But much most carefully of all he examined Yasmini's portrait returning to it again and again. He reached the conclusion in the end that when it was taken she had been cunningly dis-

"This was intended for purpose of identification at a given time and piace." he told himself. "Were you muttering at me?" aske

Hyde.

"No sir. Nothing of the sort is Hyde turned an indignant back on him, and King studied the back as if he found it interesting. On the whole be looked sympathetic, so it was as well that Byde did not look around. Balked ambition as a rule loather ayspathy. After many prickly-bet, in joiting hours the train drew up at Rawai-Pindi station. Instantly King was on his feet with his tunic on, and he was out on the biazing but platform before the train's motion had quite elbowing but percolating through the ing nothing worth noticing

King, with his mouth full of curry, | you kindles tell me, sir, where I could | and Captain King sahib? "Certainly," King answered him. Be-looked glad to be of help. "Are you traveling on this train?" The question sounded like politeness weiling from the lips of unsuspicion.

"Yes, sir. I am traveling from this place where I have spent a few days. to Rombay, where my business is." "How did you know King sahib to on the train?" King asked him, smiling se genially that even the police could not have charged him with more than curiosity. "By telegram, sir. My brother had the mistortune to miss Captain King sahib at Peshawur and therefore sent a telegram to me asking me to do what I can at an interview." "I see," said King. "I see." And judging by the sparkle in his eyes as he looked away, he could see a lot. But the native could not see his eyes at that instant, although he tried to. He looked back at the train, giving the man a good chance to study his face in profile. "See that carriage?" he asked, point-"The fourth first-class carriage from the end? Well-there are only two of us in there; I'm Major Hyde. and the other is Captain King I'll tell Captain King to look out for you."

"Oh, thank you, sir !" said the native offlie "You are most kind! I am your humble servent, sir!

King nedded good-by to him his dark eves in the shadow of the khaki beimet seeming scarcely interested any longer "Couldn't you find another berth?" Hyde asked him angrily when he stepped back into the compartment. "What were you out there looking

King smiled back at him blandly. "I think there are rallway thieves on the train," he announced without any effort at relevance. He might not have heard the question.

Hyde sported and returned to his seat in the silence of unspeakable scorn. But presently he opened a suitcase and drew out a repeating pistol which he cocked carefully and stowed bepeath his pillow; not at all a contemptible move, because the Indian railway thief is the most resourceful specialist in the world. But King took no overt precautions of any kind.

After more interminable hours night shut down on them red-hot black-dark. meamerically subdivided into seconds by the thump of carriage wheels and lit at intervals by showers of sparks from the gasping engine. Then King. strangely without kicking off his shore. drew a sheet up over his shoulders. Or the opposite berth Hyde covered his head, to keep dust out of his hair, and presently King heard him begin to adjusted his own position so that his profile lay outlined in the dim light from the gas lamp to the roof. He might almost have been waiting to be shaved. Long after midnight his vigil was rewarded by a slight sound at the door. From that instant his eves were on the watch, under dark closed lashes; but his even breathing was that of the seventh stage of sleep that knows no dreams.

A click of the door-latch heralded the appearance of a hand. With skill. of the nort that only special training can develop, a man in native dress insinusted himself into the carriage

That the Native Turned Away at without making another sound of any kind. King's cars are part of the

For about five minutes, while the darkness, the man stood listening and watching King's face. He stood so near that King recognized him for the one who had accounted him on Rawal-

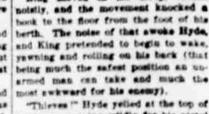

Pind pintform. And he could nee the outline of the knife-hilt that the man't ingers clutched undernooth his shire He frigned sleep so successfully the equipment for his exacting busin

train swayed headlong into Inc shut again.

"Thought so!" He dared open his

As he watched, the thief drew the sheet back from Hyde's face, with trained fingers that could have taken spectacies from the victim's nose with out his knowledge. Then as fish gilde in and out among the reeds without touching them, swift and soft and unseen, his fingers searched Hyde's body.

King moved in his sleep, rother

They found nothing.

eyes a mite wider. "He's pukke to type! Rob first and then kill?"

"Thieves !" Hyde yelled at the top of his lungs, groping wildly for his pistol and not finding it.

King sat up and rubbed his eyes. The native drew the knife, and bepering himself in command of the situation-heaftated for one priceless second. He saw his error and darted for the door too late. With a movement unbelievably swift King was there sheed of him; and with another movement not so swift, but much more disconcerting, he threw his sheet as the retiarius used to throw a set in ancient Rome. It wrapped round the native's bend and arms, and the two went together to the four in a twisted stranglebold.

In another half-minute the native was grouning, for King had his knifewrist to two hands and was bending it backward while he pressed the man's stomech with his kness

The knife fell to the floor, and the thief made a gallant effort to recover it, but King was too strong for him. He selved the knife himself, slipped to in his own bosom and resumed his hold before the native guessed what he was after. The train acreamed itself to a standetill at a wayside station, and a man with a lantern began to chant the station's name. The instant the train's motion altogether reased the heat shut in on them so if the lid of Tophet had been slammed. The price ty heat burst out all over Hyde's akts and King's too.

There was please of corner for relaxing hold and King made full use of it. A second later he gave a very good pretense of pain in his finger ends as the thief burst free. The native made s dive at his bosom for the knife, but be frustrated that. Then he made a prodigious effort, just too late, to clutch the man again, and he did sucreed in tearing loose a piece of shirt; but the fleeing robber must have wondered as he bolted into the blacket each an tron-fingered, wide-ewate subth should have made such a truly feeble showing at the end.

"Hang it !- couldn't you hold him! Were you afraid of him, or what? demanded Hyde, beginning to dress himself. Instead of answering. King leaned out into the lamp-lit gloom, and in a minute he caught sight of a sergeant of native infantry passing down the train. He made a sign that brought the man to him on the run.

"Did you see that runeway?" he

"Ha whith I saw one running Shall follow?

"No. This piece of his shirt will identify him. Take it. Hide it! When s man with a torn shirt, into which that piece fits, makes for the telegraph office after this train has gone on see that he is allowed to send any telegrams he wants to! Only, have copies of every one of them wired to Capta King care of the stationmaster, Delhi.

"Grab him, and lock him up tight afterward-but not until be has sent "Atche, mhib." "Make yourself scarce, then !" Major Hyde was dressed, having perormed that military evolution in some thing less than record time. "Who was that you were talking to?" be demanded. But King did not seem to understand until the native pergeent had quite vanished into the The engine shricked of death and torment; the heat relaxed as the co-gine moved loosened let go lifted at last, and a trainlead of hot passeopers sighed thanks. "What are yes looking at?" Hyde demanded at last, sitting on King's "Only a knife," mid King. He was standing under the dim gas lamp that theired make the darkness more unbearable. He stowed the knife away in his bosom, and the major crossed to

In Doffel, King me